

GO-TO-MARKET STRATEGY

FOR GOLF WANG / CASE STUDY

Loud, weird, and built to last.

A go-to-market plan for Golf Wang's next chapter of cultural and commercial growth.

PREPARED BY JACOB MCLURE

JACOBMCLURE@BERKELEY.EDU

What's inside.

- | | | |
|-----------|---------------------------------|---|
| 01 | The Brand Today | Where Golf Wang stands in culture and commerce. |
| 02 | The Tension | Cult status vs commercial scale. |
| 03 | The Insight | From Camp Flog Gnaw to the world. |
| 04 | The Strategy | Brand thesis and three pillars. |
| 05 | The Drop | A seasonal capsule to anchor the launch. |
| 06 | Channel Plan | Where the work shows up. |
| 07 | Creator Program | Who carries the story forward. |
| 08 | Measurement & Budget | How we know it worked. |

A cult that became culture.

Golf Wang is one of the most culturally significant streetwear brands of the last decade. Founded by Tyler, the Creator, the brand has built a loyal community around irreverence, self-expression, and a willingness to look ridiculous before looking cool.

Camp Flog Gnaw drops, runway shows that feel like art projects, and a refusal to play by the rules of luxury or streetwear have made Golf Wang the rare brand that audiences feel ownership over. The product is loved. The community is loyal. The cultural relevance is real.

The question is what comes next.

How do you grow without losing the weirdness that made it work?

The growth opportunity sits in expanding into the elevated streetwear conversation without trading away the irreverence that built the cult in the first place.

The brand's most powerful sales moments happen in culture, not in retail.

At Camp Flog Gnaw in 2024, I watched what happens when Golf Wang shows up in its native habitat. The drops at the festival are not merchandise. They are cultural artifacts. People wait in lines they would never wait in at a store because the product is inseparable from the moment of buying it.

That is the strategic key. Golf Wang's growth path is not bigger stores or broader distribution. It is more moments. Music-anchored drops. Community-anchored events. Artist-anchored capsules. Every meaningful sales moment Golf Wang has had in the last decade has been wrapped in culture, and the brands that have tried to copy the streetwear playbook without copying the culture-first sequencing have all flattened the same way.

Golf Wang isn't a brand. It's a permission slip.

Permission to be weird, to be loud, to dress for yourself and nobody else.
Every piece of marketing should ladder up to that idea.

Three pillars.

01

Stay weird

Protect the irreverence. Resist the pull toward polish. Every campaign should make somebody slightly uncomfortable.

02

Anchor in culture

Music, art, community, sport.
Never sell from a store first. Sell from a moment.

03

Build for the long game

Avoid the hype cycle. Drops are events, not transactions.
Customers should age into the brand, not out of it.

"Field Day."

A capsule built around organized chaos. The fictional school field day reimagined through the Golf Wang lens. Track-and-field-inspired warm-up suits, ribbon medal accessories, oversized varsity letterman pieces, primary-color knitwear, and one absurd hero piece (the giant inflatable mascot costume worn at the runway show).

The drop launches with a real event. A one-day pop-up at a high school field somewhere in Los Angeles, programmed like an actual field day. Sack races, three-legged races, dodgeball tournaments. Tyler hosts. The drop is only available to people who show up. Footage becomes the campaign.

Who we're talking to.

CORE

The Day-One Fan

Has bought Golf Wang since high school. Owns multiple Tyler hoodies. Watches every Camp Flog Gnaw stream.

EMERGING

The Streetwear-Curious

Owns one or two streetwear pieces. Follows Tyler on Instagram. Has not bought Golf Wang yet but would.

ASPIRATIONAL

The Style Native

Already shops KITH, Aimé Leon Dore, Stussy. Open to Golf Wang if it shows up in their lane.

Where it shows up.

EXPERIENTIAL

The field day pop-up

The cultural anchor. Drop launches here. Footage becomes everything else.

INSTAGRAM + TIKTOK

POV and behind-the-scenes

Native, irreverent, founder-driven. Tyler in the work. No polish.

YOUTUBE

The mini-doc

A 15-minute Camp Flog Gnaw-style cut of the field day event. Brand storytelling at its richest.

WEB + DTC

The drop page

Bright, weird, designed like a field day program. Built to be screenshot-able.

PRINT + EDITORIAL

Zine + indie placements

A printed zine that ships with every order. Editorial placement in print magazines.

Who carries the story.

Golf Wang already has the most authentic creator network in fashion: its own community. The opportunity is to seed product to the cultural figures who are already aligned with the brand's spirit and let them show up in the campaign organically rather than transactionally.

TIER 1

Cultural Anchors

Tyler. Frank Ocean. Tyler's collaborators.

TIER 2

Expressive Athletes

Shai Gilgeous-Alexander. Jarred Vanderbilt. Athletes whose style is part of their identity.

TIER 3

Style-Native Creators

Mid-tier creators in the streetwear, music, and skate spaces who already own Golf Wang.

8-week rollout.

WEEKS 1-2

Tease

Cryptic IG and TikTok posts. Field day-inspired stills with no context. Build curiosity.

WEEKS 3-4

Announce

Drop date, location, capsule preview. Founder voice on IG and X.

WEEK 5

Event

Field day pop-up. Live content across all channels. Drop releases.

WEEKS 6-8

Echo

Mini-doc on YouTube. Zine ships with orders. Print editorial drops. Recap content.

How we know it worked.

Golf Wang's measurement framework should match its strategy. Most fashion brands measure traffic and conversion. Golf Wang should measure culture.

COMMERCIAL

Drop sell-through rate

Event attendance

DTC traffic from earned media

Repeat customer rate

CULTURAL

Earned media placements

Creator-generated content

Community-shared event footage

Brand mention quality

What it costs.

$280K

Punching above weight. Designed to feel bigger than it is.

$140K

EVENT PRODUCTION

Pop-up venue and talent

$60K

CONTENT PRODUCTION

Zine, mini-doc, photography

$50K

CREATOR SEEDING

Product to all three tiers

$30K

PAID AMPLIFICATION

Boost top organic content

Loud, weird, and built to last.

Thank you for reading.

JACOB MCLURE

JACOBMCLURE@BERKELEY.EDU / (310) 614-3893